COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROJECTS

- 2010-present Community participation project with Churches United for Fair Housing.
- 2009- present Academic semester project: North Brooklyn Latino (and others) Oral History Project.

- 2006 Unique summer session for pre-med students, an eight week session. Seminars with physicians and medical college administrators. Seminars with local level leaders from Williamsburg, Brooklyn and two separate sections through which Cornell students have contact with inner-city children and youth from Williamsburg and Bedford-Stuyvesant..
- 2005 Unique summer session for pre-med students, an eight week session. Seminars were developed with physicians and medical school administrators. Seminars with local level “popular” religious practitioners, representing relatively new immigrant populations and American natives (Haitian Voudun, Korean Buddhism, Jewish Hasidism, Native American). A unique photograph project was developed with teenage boys from Bedford Stuyvesant, “Good Health in the Hood,” developing deeper insights into the practice of communication across socio-cultural and economic boundaries.
- 2002-2006 Community service learning student placements in cooperation with South Side Community Mission, Beginning with Children Charter School, Nuestros Ninos Child Development Center, Northside Catholic Academy, and the Saint Nicholas Neighborhood Preservation Corp, Ghetto Film School, Bedford Styvesant after school academy.
- 2002-2003 Development of the North Brooklyn Community Directory in cooperation with South Side Community Mission, Beginning with Children Charter School, Nuestros Ninos Child Development Center, Northside Catholic Academy, and the Saint Nicholas Neighborhood Preservation Corp.
- 1995-2000 Banana Kelly Community Improvement Association, “Alternative Visions” with 20 South Bronx children (ages 7-14, photographic project of community, exhibit and oral presentations at opening. Between four and ten Cornell University undergraduates learned about the South Bronx with the children.
- 1994-1998 Women’s and Children’s Health Center of Western Queens, New York Hospital/Cornell Medical Center. Health education outreach. Students developed outreach material for local communities and provided presentations in community settings. Up to two Cornell University students learned about community Clinics and the populations they serve.
- 1994-present Burn Center, New York Presbyterian Hospital, New York. “Ouch!...Be Careful,” Newsletter for Burn Victims and The Ones They Love. In collaboration with Vivian Youngblood. Also direct services provided by students. This is part of a pre-med program that takes place in New York Presbyterian Hospital/Cornell Weill College of Medicine. Students work with burn patients, often children, help them move body parts, often help clean burn wounds, and learn about the culture of medicine and socio-cultural issues related to the nature of burns among children and adults.

- 1994-present TAPP Program (Teenage Pregnancy and Parenting Program), New York Presbyterian Hospital/Cornell Medical Center. Direct service, program development, health education outreach. Up to five students are folded into this program to assist young teen mothers and mothers to be to adjust to an unfamiliar and often times threatening medical culture. They help socialize the young patients and assist them through difficult times in the clinical setting. One Cornell University student became “god-mother” to one of the teens. Cornell students learn about women’s, adolescent, pre-natal-neo-natal and pediatric medicine and team-based medical care.
- 1994-2004 New York City Schooling. Participants have included the Harvey Milk School of the Hetrick-Martin Institute, East Harlem School at Exodus House, Banana Kelly High School, and North Brooklyn Schools (see below). Mentoring and other direct services. Up to 32 Cornell undergraduates are distributed over the landscape to schools, each of which decides the nature of support they need from the students. Most engage in tutoring that usually results in bonding and the transfer of unintended information, such as college life and issues related to boundary crossing. Cornell University students learn about the nature of life among children in some of the most disadvantaged parts of New York City. Not inconsequential for most teachers, Cornell students relieve some of the stresses and strains of teaching 25 or more students.
- 1994-present Unique relationship established with the Beginning with Children School and Beginning with Children Foundation. Mentoring, in-class and pull-out services, and other program services, including research. As above, students bond with the children and vice versa, with powerful unintended learning produced by them through the development of mutuality. Teachers appreciate the support they get from our students. As many as sixteen students have participated in a semester.
- 1994-present Unique relationship established with Nuestros Ninos, pre-school. Direct services, supporting schooling activities, pre-and after-school. This part of the program began by providing Cornell students to a Spanish monolingual setting to enable pre-schoolers to assimilate English, enough so that they would gain the confidence necessary to enter public school settings. Up to four students participate.
- 2000-present Unique relationship established with the South Side Mission, Williamsburg that includes North Brooklyn schools: Beginning with Children, Nuestros Ninos, the Northside Academy, Fort Green Community Charter School. On each site, students have participated as mentors to children and assisted teachers in the classroom. As is the case for the above mentioned school programs, Cornell University students gain the insights of what it is like to live in a primarily people of color neighborhood and the resiliency and power found among residents to improve their lives.
